Tribute to Vincent Broderick

Henry G. Miller*

Vincent Broderick, by virtue of his uncompromising integrity and love of the law, was one of the most respected members of the Bar and Bench in New York. Whether as Police Commissioner of the City of New York, as the United States Attorney of the Southern District, as a Federal Judge, or even as a soldier in World War II, he was always there when his country needed him.

His life teaches us about the deep satisfaction of public service. A man blessed with many advantages, he could easily have spent his life concerned only with personal gain. Instead, he chose to help others.

It would be a better world if there were more Vincent Brodericks.
