Basic Bluebooking—Case Law in Legal Documents

The general rule for case citations is that parallel citations are not required, unless court rules or your professor requires them. Table T.1 tells you what case reporters to cite for each court in a jurisdiction, and how to abbreviate the court and the state. The current (20th) edition of the Bluebook was published in May 2015.

The abbreviations for the name of the court and the jurisdiction are required in the parenthetical, with some exceptions: the U.S. Supreme Court, and, for state courts, rule 10.4(b) allows omission of the jurisdiction and court abbreviation if they are unambiguously conveyed by the name of the case reporter. For regional reporters, if you are citing a decision from the highest court, exclude the name of the court and include the state only. Party names may be underlined or italicized.

* The Bluebook does not require the department in citations for the N.Y. Appellate Division (see rule B10.1.3(v), p14); however, many professors do. Remember that the Bluebook is only the default.

* The one party name can be either party. When selecting the short form party name, keep in mind it should be clear to your reader what case you are citing. Rule 10.9(a)(i) on page 116 says not to use a governmental party as the party name for a short form. For instance, when coming up with a short form party name for Miranda v. Arizona, use Miranda not Arizona.

Basic Bluebooking—Statutes in Legal Documents

The following chart covers citation of federal and New York State statutes. For other states, use the jurisdictional table T.1 in the Bluebook to find the proper source to cite and its format. Note that the Bluebook requires the year of the cited code edition—either the year on the spine or the copyright year. The current (20th) edition of the Bluebook was published in May 2015.

* For statutes, it is acceptable to just use the section as the short citation as long as it doesn't confuse your reader. For instance, rather than 42 U.S.C. § 1983, you can just use § 1983. For New York, you can use § 120.05 rather than Penal § 120.05. Consult the table on page 134 of the Bluebook for acceptable short forms for statutes.

Basic Bluebooking—Secondary Sources in Legal Documents

The Bluebook provides a standardized way to provide attribution for ideas and support for arguments in a legal document or research paper. Keep in mind that the Bluebook contains the default rules for citation—court rules or your professor may have other requirements. The current (20th) edition of the Bluebook was published in May 2015.

The inside back cover of the Bluebook has examples of citation for legal documents. The Bluepages (pages 3-56) provide an introduction to basic legal citation, and contain much of what you need to know for your first year writing assignments. Note that, although the examples in the white pages of the Bluebook make use of LARGE AND SMALL CAPITAL LETTERS, you are not required to use these in legal documents—in general they are used in footnotes for law review articles and research papers. Note also that citations from Westlaw, Lexis, and Bloomberg Law are not always in Bluebook format.
